EDUCATION FROM CHICAGO

Theories of Learning and Instruction
Edited by Ernest R. Hilgard

This yearbook evaluates the contribution of learning theory and experimentation on learning to the technology of education. It includes chapters dealing with educational technology, a discussion of a psychology of teaching, a review of the meaning of readiness as it affects school practices, and other chapters that focus on concrete problems of educational reform and instruction.

The Uses of Sociology in Education
Edited by C. Wayne Gordon

Educators and sociologists discuss the ways in which the discipline of sociology may be applied to contemporary educational issues. The volume contains sections on "The Youth Culture—Alienation, Protest, and Dissent"; "Equality of Educational Attainment"; "Race—Ethnic Desegregation, Integration, and Decentralization"; and "The Role of the Federal Government in Education."

Media and Symbols: The Forms of Expression, Communication, and Education
Edited by David R. Olson

This work explores the nature and educational consequences of communication technology. The book analyzes symbol systems as forms of expression and communication and points to the educational implications of this analysis. It shows that while educational institutions are profoundly affected by new technologies of communication, they often severely restrict the uses of those technologies.
